Journal Impact Factor

The Journal Impact Factor (JIF) is a journal-level metric calculated from data indexed in the Web of Science Core Collection. It should be used with careful attention to the many factors that influence citation rates, such as the volume of publication and citations characteristics of the subject area and type of journal. The Journal Impact Factor can complement expert opinion and informed peer review. In the case of academic evaluation for tenure, it is inappropriate to use a journal-level metric as a proxy measure for individual researchers, institutions, or articles. Learn more

The 'AUTHOR CENTER' tab is selected.

Article Types

When sending either new manuscripts or presubmission inquiries to the New England Journal of Medicine (NEJM), authors must classify their submissions as one of the article types described below.

Note, however, that these guidelines are intended for initial submissions to NEJM; if a paper is selected for revision and potential acceptance for publication, NEJM will likely request updated materials that adhere to much stricter guidelines for print and online publications.

Most article types are subject to peer review, and certain article types — such as reviews and editorials — are usually solicited by NEJM editors, though unsolicited submissions may be considered.

AUTHORSHIP

All individuals meeting International Committee of Medical Journal Editors (ICMJE) criteria for article authorship must be named as article authors. Research articles do not have an authorship limit, but other articles may have

Policies and Guidelines

Letters to the Editor are considered for publication (subject to editing and abridgment) provided they do not contain material that has been submitted or published elsewhere.

Submission of a Letter to the Editor constitutes permission for the Massachusetts Medical Society, its licensees, and its assignees to use it in the various print and electronic publications of the New England Journal of Medicine (NEJM) and in collections, revisions, and any other form or medium.

Letters accepted for publication will appear in print, on the Journal's website at NEJM.org, or both.

NEJM adheres strictly to the following policies regarding Letters to the Editor.

Letters in reference to Journal articles:

- May include up to 175 words (title, references, and author signatures are not counted toward total)
- Must be received within three weeks after publication of article referenced
- May be shared with article authors

Letters not related to Journal articles:

- May include up to 400 words (title, references, and author signatures are not counted toward total)

All letters:

- May be signed by up to three authors
- May include up to five references and one figure or table
- May list only one institutional affiliation (without department or division names) or street address per author
